If you have about four hours a month to spare, you can help teach elementary students in Oregon and SW Washington about Japan by serving as a volunteer for JASO's school visitation program called Japan on the Road: Teaching Elementary Students about Contemporary Japanese Society.

JASO volunteers have visited many elementary schools since the program began, teaching almost 8,000 students about Japan! Japan on the Road is very popular and this school year alone we expect more than 100 schools to request visits. The program centers around Japanese School Life and teaches American elementary students about what it's like to live in Japan.

Don't worry about training—in addition to providing one-to-one training at your request, we encourage new volunteers to attend a few classroom visits to see the program in action. A training workshop for new volunteers is also available. If you think you would be interested in learning more about Japan on the Road, complete the form below and send it to JASO. If you have questions about the program or would like to visit a classroom to see it in action, please call Sheryl Fuller at (503) 552-8814. We look forward to hearing from you!
